International Organization of Black Security Executives

The International Organization of Black Security Executives (IOBSE) was founded in 1982 by Black Security Executives concerned about the relatively small number of minority professionals, and the role black security professionals could have in helping young people.

The mission of IOBSE is to:

- Impart professional resources to aid in the integration of security management into business operations.
- Provide education and training to keep practitioners and students abreast of current trends in security operations and technology.
- Assist in professional networking in order to facilitate the exchange of information, ideas, knowledge and experience.
